1 Overview

Credit reports are frequently used as part of a background check. Credit reports can help verify basic facts about the search subject, including prior employers, addresses, and other names the search subject may have used. This information may be used as input for other screenings, such as employment verification and criminal records searches. For example, identifying prior addresses can be important for deciding which courts to target for a criminal records search. Of course, credit reports also provide valuable insight into a job applicant's financial responsibility. This may be particularly important if a position involves handling cash, responsibility for managing money, or similar fiduciary responsibilities.

1.1 Objective

There are several private “bureaus” that provide credit reports for employment screening purposes. Within the United States, Experian's Employee Insight™, Equifax's Persona™, and Trans Union's PEER™ are the most widely used services. Each service makes its data available in its own proprietary format.

The HR-XML Consortium's Credit Report schema is intended to be granular and sufficiently detailed to capture all of the credit data relevant to employment screening. In designing the schema, members of the HR-XML Consortium's Screening workgroup reviewed the reports produced by each of the credit bureaus. They were careful to ensure that the HR-XML Consortium Credit Reports schema could accommodate all the relevant data fields from the credit bureau report formats. The HR-XML Consortium schema has been designed so that where necessary, the credit bureau's codes, scoring, and scoring model identifiers can be passed through within an HR-XML Credit Report instance document.

Implementors should note that the Consortium's Credit Report schema is not necessarily suitable for purposes other than employment screening. Consider that the Mortgage Industry Standards Maintenance Organization (see <http://www.mismo.org>) has developed an XML specification for the capture of credit-report details necessary for the processing of mortgage applications. The MISMO specification captures the set of credit-report data pertinent to mortgage processing in the same way that the HR-XML specification captures credit report data pertinent to employment screening.

1.2 Terminology

Credit Bureau. An agency that provides credit and collection data on consumers within a particular time frame (usually measured in years). This data includes people's credit histories, and can be released in the form of credit reports.

Credit score. This term is used to refer to credit bureau risk scores. It broadly refers to a number generated by a statistical model that is used to objectively evaluate information that pertains to making a credit decision.

Equifax. One of the three major credit bureaus.

Experian. One of the three major major credit bureaus, formerly known as TRW.

Inquiry. Every time a lender requests a credit report, a notation is made on the consumer's record describing the lender, the type of request, and the date. The request is called an "inquiry" and is used to monitor consumer requests for credit.

Installment Loan. A credit account in which the amount of the payment and the number of payments are predetermined or fixed.

Public Record. Information obtained by the credit bureau from public court records, such as liens, bankruptcy filings, and judgments. Public records are open to any person who requests them.

Revolving Account. An account which requires at least a specified minimum payment each month plus a service charge on the balance. As the balance declines, the amount of the service charge, or interest, also declines.

Trans Union. One of the three major credit bureaus.

2 Business Process Supported

The HR-XML Consortium's Credit Report schema was designed as a component of the HR-XML Consortium's Background Checking specification. For a description and illustration of supported business processes, see:

http://ns.hr-xml.org/2_0/HR-XML-2_0/Screening/BackgroundChecking.doc

The Credit Reporting schema also could be used on a "stand-alone" basis. For example, the schema might be useful in building interfaces between "credit reporting engines" and employment screening service providers.

3 Schema Design

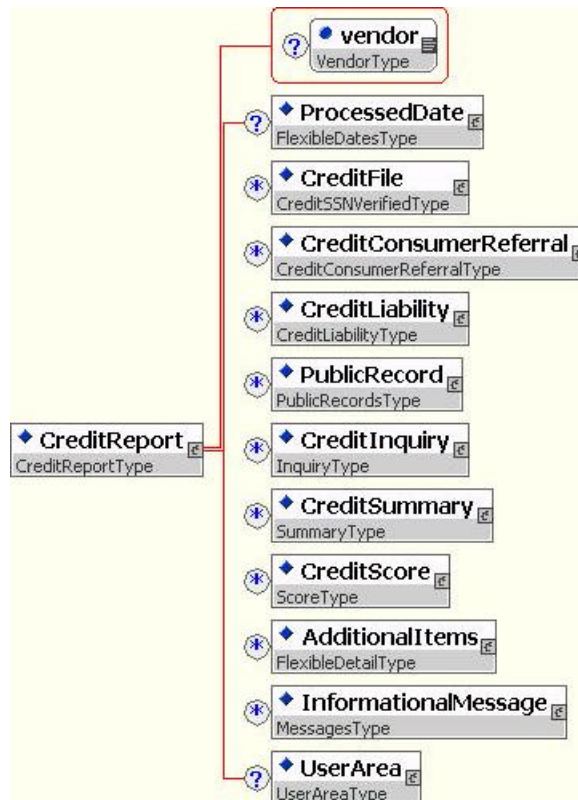

3.1 Design Requirements: Interoperability With Credit Bureau Formats

The HR-XML Consortium Credit schema was designed as much as possible to be interoperable with data formats used by major credit bureaus. The HR-XML Consortium's Screening workgroup tried to ensure that all data fields relevant to employment screening could be mapped from credit-bureau formats to the HR-XML Consortium's interchange format. The schema is designed so that where necessary, credit bureau's codes, scoring, and scoring model identifiers can be passed through within an HR-XML Credit Report instance document. Consequently, a full understanding of how to implement the HR-XML Credit Report schema may require some understanding of the source credit-bureau formats and codes. Implementers should contact the credit bureaus directly for technical details on their data formats and code sets.

3.2 Schema Element Descriptions

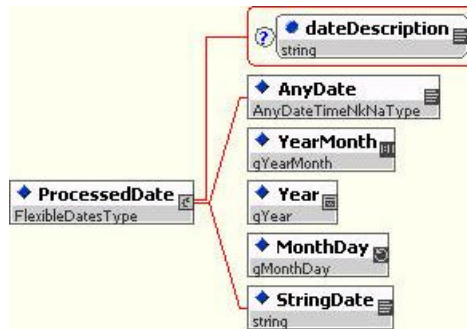

The following sections provide diagrams and element descriptions for each major section of the HR-XML Consortium's Credit Reporting schema.

3.2.1 Credit Report

4 Implementation Considerations

4.1 Data Privacy

Human resources data, by its very nature, is personal data. The laws of many jurisdictions as well as codes of fair information practice require organizations to handle personal data in a way that protects individuals from loss of privacy.

The data exchange specifications developed by the HR-XML Consortium are designed to be useful across many jurisdictions and within a variety of business contexts. It is not feasible for the HR-XML Consortium to develop specific privacy guidance for every jurisdiction or business context in which the Consortium's specifications might be implemented. When implementing data exchanges using the HR-XML Consortium's data definitions (or, for that matter, using any other type of data exchange mechanism), organizations are advised to examine the privacy protections that may be required under applicable law and codes of fair information practice.

For information on protecting personal data, general references include: European Union Data Protection Directive (95/46/EC); the Association Computing Machinery Code of Ethics (1992); Canadian Standards Association Model Code for the Protection of Personal Information (1995 – PIPEDA); and U.S.-EU Safe Harbor Principles and FAQs (2000).

4.2 Laws Governing Credit Checks

Implementers of the HR-XML Consortium's Credit Report schema are advised to review applicable law in the jurisdictions in which they operate. For example, in United States, the Fair Credit Reporting Act may require third-party providers of background-check services to obtain the consent of search subjects and to advise them of results before adverse action is taken.
